Choosing Which Tomato to Grow

Now is the time to read all the seed catalogs and choose which seeds you're going to plant and grow this year. With so many to choose from, it can be hard to know which are the right ones for you. Some things to consider as you begin your search.

Season Length: Our season is very long, so the mid and later varieties may be the best to choose from. All varieties are marked with days to maturity on the back of the seed packet which represents the number of days from when you set out young plants to when you pick ripe fruit.

Climate: Heat-tolerant varieties will set fruit at higher temperatures, where others may drop blossoms.

Type of fruit: If you like big flavorful slices of tomato beefsteak is a good choice. With our intense early heat, you may want to consider a slightly smaller variety that won't crack as easy. For sandwiches and salads, the small to medium-size round varieties are great. If you are making sauce consider a meaty variety such as Roma. Cherry and grape types are great for salads and snacks.

Gardening experience: Some varieties are easier to grow than others. If you're just starting out an "easy" or "adaptable" variety is a good choice. Just for fun you may want to try Bi-color tomatoes, the black, green, orange, white, artisan, indigo, or yellow ones. Keeping a journal is a great way to record favorites and successes.
